			FREEFORM - GREENPARK

Freeform is the extremely free and open minded doppelganger from simon pyke, the prolific english musician. sampled by howie b, and getting credits for it !, appearing everywhere action is: skam, warp, worm interface, language (on electric kingdom as nudge), law and auder, chocolate industries (beside autechre, bisk, funkstörung etc.)... freeform is a 'non-linear' electronician, experimenting and investigating every aspects of what electronic music is and should be. for his new album under the sub rosa banner, freeform is playing with the world of acoustic sources... creating a toy box ready to be open for fun and pleasure, forget all about pandora's. action! exotism! weird things from outer space! simon pyke aka freeform is guiding, whoever listens to this stange and amazingly beautiful album, to unknown countries. green park is filled with the sound of a gamelan ensemble facing the gateway to King Kong's lair, with the astonishing sound from futuristic samba anthems, and sometimes with childish neo-expressionist lullabies close to the Resident's. an incredible soundtrack for a movie to create while listening -eyes shut- to this album, the source of inspiration for a roger corman james bond-like featuring exotic dancers abducted by pink and purple aliens while having psychedelic dreams under a snow storm in bali. this time there will be rumble in the quiet electronic village, and nobody to save this Island Earth, at last! looking back to freeform's already thick discography (he appeared on labels like skam, warp, language, law and auder...) one might say that green park is once again a musical neologism, an habit that Simon Pyke will surely not abandon that soon.

if you thought you knew freeform have a walk in this green park and be sure things might change a little bit!

			File Under: incredibly strange groovy electronica
